G. B. Terry, of King William county, charged with uttering forged court orders, was again taken up in the Hustings Court before Judge S. B. Witt yesterday Court before Judge S. B. Witt yesterday morning. Bursley Taylor, who was again put on the stand, when asked by Commonwealth's Attorney Smith, stated that he and Terry were at the Hotel Dodson on December 12th and 14th. He was shown a number of checks, which, he said, had been endorsed by Terry. They had been given by him to Terry in part payment for a debt he owed nim, and Terry used them in paying his own debts. When asked as to Mr. Terry's reputation in his county for solvency or insolvency. Taylor replied that there were a number of judgments against him, and that his property stood not in his own name. Mr. Smith was followed by R. R. Florence, a young lawyer, for the defence, who acquitted himself of his duty in a very creditable manner. Mr. H. I. Lewis then made a very cloquent and able appeal for the prisoner, and Mr. Haw made the final argument for Terry. He had only partly delivered his address when a recess was taken, at 210 P. M.

The court reconvened after dinner at 420 o'clock, and Mr. Haw continued his speech. He pointed out the various instructions given to the jury, and stated his reasons why he thought the accused should be acquitted.

Commenwealth's Attorney Smith then concluded the argument for the Commonwealth, and described in detail the various transactions during which the forged court orders had been palmed off on business men in this city. At 640 P. M. Mr. Smith completed his speech, and the case was given to the jury.

The jury returned into the court-room shortly after 8 o'clock, and when questioned by the Court, the foreman stated that they were unable to agree upon a verdit. Thereupon the court was adjourned until his morning at 10 o'clock, and the jury was sent out to Ford's Hotel, where they were locked up for the night.

THE CONDUIT COMPANY.

Mr. Jenkins, the Inventor of the Underground System, Talks.

Mr. W. F. Jenkins, the inventor of the Jenkins Underground Trolley System, remarked, in explanation of the petition of the Richmond Conduit Railway Company, recently submitted to the Council, that this method had been chosen as the best way of bringing the matter of the Broadstreet franchise again formally to the attention of the Sircet Committee. He explained that the money to build the road had been contracted for before the franchise was granted, but that hostile interests intervened, and the capitalists already secured had declined (**comply with their contract, availing themselves of a technical flaw.

"These same malign influences," he continued, "have broken off negotiations practically consummated three different times within the last month, and it was only by the most persistent and continuous effects that our representatives were practically consummated three different times within the last month, and it was only by the most persistent and continuous efforts that our representatives were able finally to secure the necessary funds. This has been done; the contracts are finally closed in a binding and permanent shape; the 'am of ten thousand dollars has been deposited with the State Bank, and the only condition of this deposit is that the city shall grant certain reasonable amendments, which we will present in a very few days to the Committee on Streets. These amendments were rendered necessary by the fact that the capitalists now interested were not consulted as to the terms of the franchise originally granted, and they will naturally desire to be heard by the committee as to several parts of the ordinance. For the most part, the amendments proposed will be merely formal, the most important being one providing that any satisfactory underground system may be used, electrical or cable. Some of my friends have thought that this was a desertion of my system, but this is a mistake. Our engineers have approved this system, and it is our purpose, unless prevented by some unforescen contingencies, to install it, but a moment's reflection will convince any business man that it would be most unwise and inexpedient for capital to be restricted to any one specified system, as, under those circumstances, a possible failure to work satisfactorily, or even a patchel-up infringement suit would tie up the money indefinitely, and prevent the city from having the benefits of our road. I am the one most interested in the adoption and installation of the Jenkins system, and, if I am willing to loosen the legal restrictions upon the franchise, so as to provide for the possible use of some other system, it ought to be manifest that I am satisfied the company proposes to use my system, unless there should arise some good, unforeseen reason to the contrary. It has been rather unkindly said that this deposit with the State Bank has a string tied to it. If this be true, it is also true that I has two strings tied to it—one, and the strongest, held by the city. Should the city consider our proposed amendments reasonable, they will grant them and revive our franchise and as soon as that is done, the City Treasurer can check for PUBLIC SCHOOL CENSUS. The mother of the young birds showed fight, and her piercing cries soon brought a score or more of other sparrows to her rescue. Tom beat a hasty retreat, but the birds followed him out into the street, where the battle waxed hotter and hotter.

The sparrows swarmed about the despoler of the nest in lozans, pecking at his head, ears, and back, and then darting away before he had a chance to claw them. Occasionally Tom would stop, and rising on his hind legs, make a wicked lunge at the birds, and several were sent to the earth as the result of his sharp claws. The air was filled with the little excited birds, and their chatter could be heard a block away. By this time Tom was squalling at the top of his voice, and his cyses glowed like coals of tire. The fight continued up the street until the hotel was reached, when Tom made a dive for the office, but was headed off, and at last found refuge under a cab that stood in front of the door. A large crowd gathered and saw the fight wased by the birds on their common enemy. Under the cab the birds could not reach Tom without subjectine themselves to great danger from his sharp claws, and soon flew back to the barn chattering and making every possible manifestation of delight.
